Hood's thesis is that the self is an illusion, but what this means is not clear. He uses the analogy of a Kanizsa triangle to illustrate the idea that the "self" is carved out of the negative space created by social and cultural interactions. It's an interesting analogy but as far as I can tell it doesn't lead anywhere.

The Illusion of the Self | Sam Harris

Who we are," Hood writes, "is a story of our self – a constructed narrative that our brain creates". Bruce uses a "a distinction that William James drew between the self as "I" and "me." Our consciousness of the self in the here and now is the "I" and most of the time, we experience this as being an integrated and coherent individual – a bit like the character in the story.
