Systems research would call it a contrived system, because it consists both of objects and human beings who read, write, rewrite books. All writing of literature takes place under the two constraints, patronage and poetics, to which two more constraints must be added. Translation is probably the most obvious instance of rewriting.

The Manipulation School: André Lefevere On every level of the translation process, it can be shown that, if linguistic considerations enter into conflict with considerations of an ideological and / or poetological nature, the latter tend to win out. (André Lefevere) One of the criticisms that has, sometimes, been levelled at the polysystem theory is that it tends to disregard the ideological factors, which have a considerable impact on the translators' decisions.
